8 MARKS

I. In both "Patol Babu, Film Star" by Satyajit Ray and "Two Gentlemen of Verona" by A.G. Krodin, the protagonists exhibit personal determination in the face of challenges, though their circumstances and responses differ significantly.

Patol Babu, Film Star by Satyajit Ray

Patol Babu is a middle-aged man who once had dreams of becoming a successful actor. Life, however, took a different turn, and he ended up in a series of unfulfilling jobs. When he gets a small role in a film, he initially feels humiliated by the insignificance of the part. Despite this, he decides to give it his best shot, recalling his mentor's advice about the dignity of every role, no matter how small¹. His determination is evident in how he practices his single line repeatedly, trying to infuse it with different emotions and meanings². Patol Babu's flexibility is shown in his ability to adapt to the situation and find satisfaction in performing his role with utmost dedication, even though it is not the big break he had hoped for.

Two Gentlemen of Verona by A.G. Krodin

In "Two Gentlemen of Verona," Nicola and Jacopo are young boys who work tirelessly to support their ailing sister. They take on various jobs, from selling newspapers to shining shoes, demonstrating remarkable determination and resilience. Their flexibility is seen in their willingness to do whatever it takes to earn money, regardless of the nature of the work³. Their determination is driven by love and responsibility, and they never complain about their hardships. Instead, they face their challenges with a positive attitude and unwavering commitment.

Comparison and Lessons

Both stories highlight the importance of determination and flexibility in overcoming life's challenges. Patol Babu's story teaches us that every opportunity, no matter how small, should be approached with dedication and professionalism. It underscores the idea that personal satisfaction and pride in one's work are crucial, regardless of external recognition². On the other hand, Nicola and Jacopo's story emphasizes the power of love and responsibility as motivators for determination. Their ability to adapt to various jobs shows that flexibility is essential in navigating difficult circumstances³.

II. The differences in the greed displayed by the frog in Vikram Seth's poem "The Frog and the Nightingale" and Abel's children in the play "The Dear Departed" can be explored on the following grounds:

Motivation

- The Frog: The frog's greed is driven by a desire for personal gain and success. He wants to maintain his dominance in the bog and sees the nightingale's talent as a threat to his status.
- Abel's Children: Abel's children are motivated by a desire for material possessions and inheritance. They are primarily concerned with acquiring their father's belongings after his death.

Actions

- The Frog: The frog exploits the nightingale's talent by manipulating her into singing under his guidance. He criticizes and overworks her, ultimately leading to her demise.
- Abel's Children: Abel's children scheme and deceive to acquire their father's possessions. They pretend to care for him but are primarily interested in what they can inherit.

Relationship

- The Frog: The relationship between the frog and the nightingale is a business-like one. The frog positions himself as a mentor, but his true intention is to exploit the nightingale for his benefit.
- Abel's Children: The relationship between Abel and his children is familial. Despite the familial bond, the children's actions are driven by greed and selfishness, leading to a strained and deceitful relationship.

Consequences

- The Frog: The consequences of the frog's greed are tragic. The nightingale, overwhelmed by the frog's demands and criticism, loses her life. The frog, however, remains unaffected and continues his life as before.

- Abel's Children: The consequences of Abel's children's greed result in a family dispute and moral dilemma. Their actions lead to a breakdown in family relationships and highlight the moral decay caused by their greed.

In summary, while both the frog and Abel's children display greed, their motivations, actions, relationships, and consequences differ significantly. The frog's greed is rooted in maintaining power and control, leading to the nightingale's tragic end. In contrast, Abel's children's greed is driven by materialism, resulting in familial conflict and moral consequences
